

Idaho: Immigrant Entrepreneurs, Innovation, and Welcoming Initiatives in the Gem State

In Idaho, there is no doubt that immigrant entrepreneurs and innovators play an important role. Immigrant entrepreneurs bring in additional revenue, create jobs, and contribute significantly to the state's economy. Highly skilled immigrants are vital to the state's innovation industries and to the metropolitan areas within the state, helping to boost local economies. Furthermore, local government, business, and non-profit leaders recognize the importance of immigrants in their communities and support immigration through local "welcoming" and integration initiatives.

Immigrant entrepreneurs contribute significantly to Idaho's economy.

- From 2006 to 2010, there were 4,051 new immigrant business owners [1] in Idaho, and in 2010, 5 percent [1] of all business owners in Idaho were foreign-born.
- In 2010, new immigrant business owners had total net business income [1] of $192 million, which is almost 5 percent of all net business income in the state.

Highly skilled immigrants are vital to Idaho's innovation industries, which in turn helps lead American innovation and creates jobs.

- Immigrants contribute to Idaho's economic growth and competitiveness by earning degrees in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) fields from the state's research universities. In 2009, around 30 percent [2] of STEM graduates from the state's research-intensive universities were foreign-born.[\[v\]](#)
- In 2011, the U.S. Department of Labor certified 551 H-1B high-skilled visa labor certification applications [3] in Idaho, with an average annual wage of $65,359, which is higher than Idaho's median household income [4] of $46,890 or per capita income of $22,788.
- An expansion [5] of the high-skilled visa program would create an estimated 1,200 new jobs in Idaho by 2020. By 2045, this expansion would add [5] around $544 million to Gross State Product and increase personal income by more than $511 million. The following is an example [6] of a metropolitan area's demand for high-skilled foreign-born workers.
 - The Boise City-Nampa metropolitan area had 360 H-1B visa requests [7] in 2010-2011, with 81.9 percent of H-1B visa-holders working in STEM occupations.

While the numbers are compelling, they don't tell the whole story.

- Immigrant entrepreneurs not only contribute to large innovative companies, but to small business formation in local communities. In towns across Idaho, immigrant family-owned small businesses contribute to the vitality of their local communities. Although initially aimed at other immigrant customers, many businesses quickly see an expansion of their clientele to include a diverse array of immigrant and native-born customers alike.
 - Lucio Prado, originally from Mexico, has opened more than half a dozen restaurants and a satellite television company in several communities around Treasure Valley, an area that includes Boise. Prado is also the chairman [8] of the Idaho Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.
 - Also in Boise, Ayad Al-Mansuri, from Iraq, was previously a dishwasher at a chain restaurant. By 2008, he was running his own company, A.H.A. Lawn Care, employing 12 and bringing in revenue close to half a million dollars.

In Idaho, localities have begun recognizing and supporting immigration through “welcoming” and integration initiatives.

- Welcoming Idaho, part of the Idaho Community Action Network and an affiliate of Welcoming America [9], states that their organization seeks [10] to “foster dialogues in our communities about our shared values...Welcoming Idaho celebrates our differences and our common values.”
 - The initiative, which launched [11] in 2007, notes [12] that “An essential part of creating a welcoming Idaho is to create real opportunities for everyone in our communities.” The organization’s values [12] include acceptance, opportunity, compassion, fairness, and respect.
- In Boise, the Idaho Office for Refugees is a private, statewide initiative [13] that “promotes mutual understanding between refugees and the larger community by sharing information, encouraging social interaction and developing opportunities for refugees to participate in all aspects of community life.”
 - The organization, along with the City of Boise Mayor’s Office, has led efforts [14] to “more fully integrate refugees into the community and create a more welcoming environment for all newcomers.”
 - Furthermore, “through the successful engagement [14] of dozens of community partners, this effort has led to the development and implementation of Boise’s first Refugee Community Plan.”
- In Wilder, a small farming community in southwest Idaho, local officials approved a resolution [15] in March 2009 that “affirms the city’s multicultural nature, urges respect and acceptance of all people and welcomes immigrants to the community.”
 - Specifically, the resolution states [16] that residents of Wilder, “composed of native Idahoans from all backgrounds and a large Hispanic community, contribute to the shared responsibility of welcoming new community members who have traveled thousands of miles to resettle with their families in the United States.”
 - The resolution goes on to encourage [16] the U.S. Congress “to enact responsible, sensible, and humane immigration reform.” The town of Rupert, in southern Idaho, has adopted a similar measure.
