

1
2 3 4 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
5 AT SEATTLE

6 F.L.B., et al.,

7 Plaintiffs,

8 v.

9 LORETTA E. LYNCH, et al.,

10 Defendants.

C14-1026 TSZ

ORDER

11 THIS MATTER comes before the Court on a partial motion to dismiss, docket 12 no. 229, pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3) and 12(b)(6), brought by 13 defendants Loretta E. Lynch, Attorney General of the United States; Juan P. Osuna, 14 Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review; Jeh C. Johnson, Secretary of 15 Homeland Security; Sarah R. Saldaña, Director of U.S. Immigration and Customs 16 Enforcement (“ICE”); León Rodríguez, Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration 17 Services (“USCIS”); Lisa McDaniel, Field Office Director for ICE’s Office of 18 Enforcement and Removal Operations (“ERO”) in Seattle; Bryan Wilcox, Assistant Field 19 Office Director for ICE’s ERO in Seattle; Sylvia M. Burwell, Secretary of Health and 20 Human Services; and Robert Carey, Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement.
21 Having reviewed all papers filed in support of, and in opposition to the motion, including 22 the supplemental briefs filed at the Court’s request, see Minute Order (docket no. 256), 23

1 and having considered the oral arguments of counsel, the Court enters the following 2 order.

3 Background

4 This action, seeking classwide declaratory and individual injunctive relief on the 5 ground that juveniles in removal proceedings have a constitutional right to counsel at 6 government expense, began with eight (8) named plaintiffs. See Compl. (docket no. 1); 7 Am. Compl. (docket no. 73). Three (3) plaintiffs were added when the Second Amended 8 Complaint, docket no. 95, was filed. In responding to these pleadings, the then-named 9 defendants did not challenge venue. See Defs.' Mot. (docket no. 80); Defs.' Supp. Brief 10 (docket no. 97); Defs.' Supp. Reply (docket no. 104). Of the eleven (11) plaintiffs 11 identified in the Second Amended Complaint, two (2) were voluntarily dismissed, see 12 Notice (docket no. 107), and the claims of another three (3) were dismissed without 13 prejudice on defendants' motion, see Order at 7-8, 11 & 38 (docket no. 114). The claims 14 of three (3) other plaintiffs, who had been granted asylum status, were later dismissed as 15 moot. See Order at 7-8 (docket no. 174).

16 To the three (3) remaining plaintiffs, the Third Amended Complaint, docket 17 no. 207, joined seven (7) more, one of whom (A.E.G.E.) had previously been dismissed 18 without prejudice. See also Minute Order (docket no. 224) (dismissing certain claims 19 that were improperly re-alleged in the Third Amended Complaint). The Third Amended 20 Complaint also joined a new defendant -- León Rodríguez, the Director of USCIS -- who 21 seeks to be dismissed because plaintiffs do not allege any actionable misconduct by 22 USCIS. As to nine (9) of the ten (10) plaintiffs left in the action (i.e., everyone other than 23

1 F.L.B.), defendants collectively assert various grounds for dismissal, including mootness, 2 improper venue, and lack of a cognizable claim to procedural due process and/or counsel 3 at government expense. The Court agrees that Director Rodríguez is not an appropriate 4 defendant, that the right-to-counsel claim of one plaintiff (J.E.V.G.) is moot, and that the 5 right-to-counsel claim of another plaintiff (M.A.M.) might soon be moot. Defendants’ 6 motion is therefore GRANTED in part, with regard to Director Rodríguez and J.E.V.G., 7 and DEFERRED in part as to M.A.M., but it is DENIED in all other respects for the 8 reasons stated in this order.

9 Discussion

10 A. Claims Against León Rodríguez

11 Plaintiffs essentially concede that they have no cognizable claim against USCIS 12 Director León Rodríguez. Plaintiffs indicate that their “primary interest in adding 13 USCIS” was to obtain discovery from the agency. See Resp. at 24 (docket no. 239).
14 They state that, if the Court makes clear USCIS must respond to discovery in this case, 15 they “would not oppose” dismissing their claims against Director Rodríguez. Id. Joining 16 a party to a lawsuit for the sole purpose of conducting discovery is improper. To the 17 extent the other parties to this litigation have refused to produce materials from USCIS 18 files, plaintiffs have remedies other than joining the USCIS Director as a defendant, for 19 example, serving a subpoena under Rule 45, filing a motion to compel under Rule 37, or 20 requesting documents under the Freedom of Information Act. Plaintiffs have made no 21 allegations that USCIS plays a role in removal proceedings or has taken any action 22 adverse to a named plaintiff. To the contrary, USCIS granted asylum status to former 23

1 plaintiffs J.E.F.M., J.F.M., and D.G.F.M., see 3d Am. Compl. at ¶¶ 75, 77, & 79 (docket 2 no. 207), and granted special immigrant juvenile status to plaintiff M.A.M., see id. at 3 ¶ 90. Plaintiffs' claims against Director Rodríguez are DISMISSED.

4 B. Mootness

5 Defendants contend that J.E.V.G.'s and M.A.M.'s right-to-counsel claims are now 6 moot and should be dismissed.¹ Both J.E.V.G. and M.A.M. have turned 18, and are no 7 longer within the class of aliens plaintiffs seek to represent. J.E.V.G. has retained an 8 attorney, and his attorney has successfully moved for the dismissal of his removal 9 proceedings so that he may seek special immigrant juvenile ("SIJ") status from USCIS.
10 See Ex. B to Mot. (docket no. 229-2).² Because no removal proceedings are now pending 11 against J.E.V.G., forming yet another basis for his exclusion from the class proposed by 12 plaintiffs, and because J.E.V.G. cannot be said to have been prejudiced, while still a 13 juvenile, by the lack of counsel at government expense, his right-to-counsel claim is 14 DISMISSED as moot.

15 M.A.M. has already received SIJ status. According to defendants' counsel, 16 M.A.M.'s removal proceedings have been continued to April 28, 2016, and he is awaiting 17

18 ¹ Plaintiffs accuse defendants of repeating an argument the Court previously rejected. The Court, 19 however, denied defendants' previous motion without prejudice, see Order at 6 (docket no. 174), thereby 20 acknowledging that circumstances might change during the course of this litigation, in which event, 21 defendants could again move for dismissal on the basis of mootness.

22 ² With regard to J.E.V.G., because the Court has considered matters outside the pleadings, defendants' 23 Rule 12(b)(6) motion must be treated as one for summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d). The Court concludes that no genuine dispute of material fact exists as to the status of J.E.V.G.'s removal proceedings and that defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law concerning the mootness of J.E.V.G.'s right-to-counsel claim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

1 approval of his adjustment to permanent resident status. See Tr. (Mar. 24, 2016) at 9:2, 2 14-18 (docket no. 261). Because M.A.M.’s removal proceedings remain pending, but are 3 likely to be dismissed in the near future, defendants’ motion to dismiss M.A.M.’s right-4 to-counsel claim is DEFERRED, and the parties are DIRECTED to file a Joint Status 5 Report by May 6, 2016, concerning the status of M.A.M.’s removal proceedings.

6 C. Venue

7 If an officer or employee of the United States is a defendant in a civil case, venue 8 is proper “in any judicial district in which . . . the plaintiff resides if no real property is 9 involved in the action.” 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1)(C) (emphasis added). In the context of 10 actions involving multiple plaintiffs, the Third and Sixth Circuits have defined the phrase 11 “the plaintiff” to mean “any plaintiff” rather than “all plaintiffs,” and thus, venue lies in a 12 judicial district in which at least one plaintiff resides. Exxon Corp. v. Fed. Trade 13 Comm’n, 588 F.2d 895 (3d Cir. 1978), implicitly overruled on other grounds by Wilton v.
14 Seven Falls Co., 515 U.S. 277 (1995); see Sidney Coal Co. v. Soc. Sec. Admin., 427 F.3d
15 336 (6th Cir. 2005).³

16 The Ninth Circuit has not fully analyzed this issue, but it has cited Exxon with 17 approval, summarizing Exxon as holding that, “in order to avoid a multiplicity of similar 18 suits in different courts, venue need be proper for only one plaintiff under 28 U.S.C.

19
20
21 ³ Defendants incorrectly suggest that the Seventh Circuit has held to the contrary. See Reply at 11 22 (docket no. 240) (citing Reuben H. Donnelley Corp. (“Donnelley”) v. Fed. Trade Comm’n, 580 F.2d 264 23 (7th Cir. 1978)). In Donnelley, the Seventh Circuit addressed only how residency is determined for federal agencies and corporate entities and where the cause of action at issue arose; the Seventh Circuit was not faced with litigation involving more than one plaintiff. See 580 F.2d at 266-70.

1 § 1391(e).” Ry. Labor Execs.’ Ass’n v. Interstate Commerce Comm’n, 958 F.2d 252, 256
2 (9th Cir. 1991); see also Matsuo v. United States, 416 F. Supp. 2d 982, 997 (D. Haw.
3 2006). Under the Third and Sixth Circuits’ interpretation of § 1391(e)(1)(C), with which 4 the Ninth Circuit does not appear to disagree, when plaintiffs initiated this action against 5 then Attorney General Eric H. Holder, Secretaries Johnson and Burwell, Director Osuna, 6 and the predecessors of Directors Saldaña, Carey, McDaniel, and Wilcox, all of whom 7 were, at the time, officers or employees of the United States, the Western District of 8 Washington was an appropriate venue because at least one of the original plaintiffs 9 resided in the district.

10 Defendants’ suggestion that the Court should depart from the Third and Sixth 11 Circuits’ guidance is unsupported by any authority. Moreover, defendants’ current venue 12 challenge is barred because it was waived when it was not raised in their previous motion 13 to dismiss. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(g)(2) & 12(h)(1).⁴ The Second Amended Complaint, 14 which was the operative pleading at the time defendants’ earlier motion to dismiss was 15

16 ⁴ Defendants argue that plaintiffs’ filing of the Third Amended Complaint provides them a “do over.”
17 See Defs.’ Mot. at 6-7 (docket no. 229) (citing Harris v. Sec’y, U.S. Dep’t of Veterans Affairs, 126 F.3d 18 339 (D.C. Cir. 1997), and In re WellPoint, Inc. Out-of-Network “UCR” Rates Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 880 19 (C.D. Cal. 2012)). Neither of the cases cited by defendants stands for such proposition. Harris merely 20 described the distinction between “forfeiture” and “waiver” of a defense, and indicated that forfeiture by 21 failing to plead may be cured via amendment pursuant to Rule 15, whereas relief is not available under 22 Rule 15 for the type of intentional relinquishment that constitutes waiver. 126 F.3d at 343 n.2.
23 In re WellPoint simply concluded, in response to the plaintiffs’ argument that the points made in the defendants’ Rule 12(b)(6) motions were or could have been raised in earlier motions to dismiss, that the defendants would not be held to the high standards applicable to motions for reconsideration.
903 F. Supp. 2d at 893-94. Moreover, In re WellPoint is not relevant to the question before the Court because Rule 12(b)(6) motions are not subject to the waiver provisions of Rules 12(g)(2) and 12(h)(1).
See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(2) (“Failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted . . . may be raised:
(A) in any pleading allowed or ordered under Rule 7(a); (B) by motion under Rule 12(c); or (C) at trial.”).

1 considered by the Court, identified plaintiffs who reside in California and Texas, as well 2 as plaintiffs who live in Washington. The Third Amended Complaint's joinder⁵ of other 3 plaintiffs who reside outside Washington does not, in any significant way, alter the scope 4 of the case, and it does not resurrect defendants' ability to contest venue. See Johnson v.
5 Bryson, 851 F. Supp. 2d 688, 704-05 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (ruling that "[t]he filing of an 6 amended complaint will not revive the right to present by motion defenses that were 7 available but were not asserted in timely fashion prior to the amendment of the pleading" 8 and rejecting the defendant's improper venue defense because inter alia "all three of the 9 New Plaintiffs reside in close geographic proximity to one or more of the Original 10 Plaintiffs"); Lanehart v. Devine, 102 F.R.D. 592, 595 (D. Md. 1984) (holding that the 11 defense of improper venue was waived by the failure to include it in the answer, even as 12 to plaintiffs who were later joined); cf. DBSI Signature Place, LLC v. BL Greensboro, 13 L.P., 2006 WL 1275394 at *5 (D. Idaho May 9, 2006) (observing that, when an amended 14

15 ⁵ Defendants argue in their motion (and in a supplemental brief filed at the Court's request) that J.R.A.P., 16 who was added as a plaintiff when the Third Amended Complaint was filed, and who is the only plaintiff 17 residing in Florida, could not be joined pursuant to Rule 20, and that the Court therefore lacks venue as to 18 J.R.A.P.'s right-to-counsel claim, citing the last sentence of § 1391(e)(1), which provides: "Additional 19 persons may be joined as parties . . . in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and with 20 such other venue requirements as would be applicable if the United States or one of its officers . . . were 21 not a party." 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1). The Court disagrees. Rule 20 permits the joinder in one action of 22 plaintiffs who "assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative with respect to or arising 23 out of the same . . . series of transactions or occurrences" if "any question of law or fact common to all plaintiffs will arise in the action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a)(1). All plaintiffs in this litigation seek identical relief with respect to their removal proceedings, which constitute the requisite "series of transactions or occurrences," and their assertion that they are constitutionally entitled to counsel at government expense in such proceedings will involve one or more common questions of law or fact. Defendants' argument that resources and methods for conducting removal proceedings vary among immigration courts and from state to state does not itself defeat joinder, but rather raises issues the Court may address in crafting any relief, in certifying any class, and/or by severing matters for trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a)(3), 20(b), 21, & 23.

1 complaint “changes the theory or scope of the case, the defendant is allowed to plead 2 anew as though it were the original complaint” (emphasis added) (quoting Brown v. E.F.
3 Hutton & Co., 610 F. Supp. 76, 78 (S.D. Fla. 1985))). The Court is satisfied that venue is 4 proper because at least one plaintiff resides in Washington, that the joinder of additional 5 plaintiffs who live outside Washington does not fundamentally change the nature of this 6 litigation, and that, by not earlier challenging venue, defendants waived any argument to 7 the contrary. Defendants’ Rule 12(b)(3) motion is DENIED.

8 D. Failure to State a Claim

9 1. Standard

10 Although a complaint challenged by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss need not 11 provide detailed factual allegations, it must offer “more than labels and conclusions” and 12 contain more than a “formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action.” Bell Atl.
13 Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007). The complaint must indicate more than 14 mere speculation of a right to relief. Id. In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court must 15 assume the truth of a plaintiff’s factual allegations and draw all reasonable inferences in 16 the plaintiff’s favor. Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987).
17 The question for the Court is whether the facts in the operative pleading sufficiently state 18 a “plausible” ground for relief. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

19 2. Rights of “Non-Admitted” Aliens

20 Defendants contend that, as “arriving” or “non-admitted” aliens, A.E.G.E., E.G.C., 21 A.F.M.J., L.J.M., M.R.J., and K.N.S.M. have no procedural due process rights under the 22
23

1 Fifth Amendment. Defendants’ argument is not supported by the authorities they cite.⁶

2 Under the Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), as amended by the Illegal

3 Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (“IIRIRA”), an alien is 4 “removable” if (i) he or she was not admitted to the United States and is “inadmissible”

5 under 8 U.S.C. § 1182, or (ii) he or she was admitted to the United States and is

6 “deportable” under 8 U.S.C. § 1227. See 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(e)(2). Before the enactment

7 of IIRIRA, a distinction had been drawn between “exclusion” and “deportation” of 8 individuals. See Dormescar v. U.S. Att’y Gen., 690 F.3d 1258, 1260 (11th Cir. 2012); 9 see also United States ex rel. Knauff v. Shaughnessy, 338 U.S. 537, 543 (1950).

10 “Excludable” aliens, meaning those who sought but had not yet achieved admission, were 11 treated as though they were detained at the border, even if they were physically present

12 within the United States, Dormescar, 690 F.3d at 1260, and “excludable” aliens were 13 entitled to fewer procedural protections than “deportable” aliens, Mariscal-Sandoval v.

14 Ashcroft, 370 F.3d 851, 854 (9th Cir. 2004). When IIRIRA became effective on 15 16 ⁶ Defendants’ reliance on both Alvarez-Garcia v. Ashcroft, 378 F.3d 1094 (9th Cir. 2004), and Wong v.

17 United States, 373 F.3d 952 (9th Cir. 2004), is misplaced. Alvarez-Garcia does not support defendants’ 18 assertion that excludable aliens have no procedural due process rights, but rather stands for the 19 proposition that Congress may treat excludable and deportable aliens differently without running afoul of 20 the equal protection prong of the substantive due process doctrines developed under the Fifth 21 Amendment. 378 F.3d at 1097-99; see also Mathews v. Diaz, 426 U.S. 67 (1976) (indicating that 22 Congress may distinguish between classes of aliens, i.e., those who are permanent residents and 23 continuously present in the United States for five years versus those who are not, in determining who is eligible for Medicare benefits). In Wong, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the plaintiff, as a “non-admitted” alien, had substantive due process rights under the Fifth Amendment, but held that the individual officers involved in the “purely invidious discrimination” at issue were entitled to qualified immunity because the law was not clearly established at the time they engaged in the constitutional violations. 373 F.3d at 970-77. The case, however, remained pending against the United States, and the parties are now engaged in settlement discussions. Wong does not involve procedural due process rights or even removal proceedings, and it offers no guidance concerning the issues now before the Court.

1 April 1, 1997, see Pub. L. No. 104-208, Div. C, § 309(a), 110 Stat. 3009 (1996), 2 exclusion and deportation proceedings were merged into the broader category of 3 “removal” proceedings.⁷ Mariscal-Sandoval, 370 F.3d at 854 n.6.

4 In support of their position, defendants rely on both pre-IIRIRA⁸ and post-IIRIRA 5 cases. None of these decisions, however, stand for the proposition that aliens who have 6 not been “admitted” into the United States are not entitled to any of the protections 7 afforded by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Indeed, most of the cases 8 cited by defendants say quite the opposite. For example, in the oldest case cited by 9 defendants, the Supreme Court interjected certain due process rights into an act of 10 Congress that concerned excludable aliens. See Yamataya v. Fisher, 189 U.S. 86 (1903).

11 In Yamataya, approximately four days after arriving in the United States, the appellant 12 was deemed a pauper and a person likely to become a public charge, and a warrant was 13 issued directing that she be taken into custody and returned to Japan. Id. at 87. The 14 warrant was issued pursuant to a statute authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to

15
16 ⁷ Removal proceedings are conducted before an immigration judge, and such proceedings are “the sole 17 and exclusive” means for determining whether an alien may be admitted to or removed from the United 18 States. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(a)(1) & (3). Pursuant to INA § 240(b), an alien in a removal proceeding may 19 offer evidence on his or her own behalf and may review the evidence and cross-examine the witnesses presented by the Government, subject to certain national security limitations. 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(4)(B).
An alien also has the statutory “privilege of being represented, at no expense to the Government, by counsel of the alien’s choosing” in both “removal proceedings before an immigration judge” and “appeal proceedings before the Attorney General.” 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229a(b)(4)(A) & 1362.

20 ⁸ Two of the pre-IIRIRA cases cited by defendants are so far afield from the issue before the Court that 21 they do not bear any further discussion. See United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez, 494 U.S. 259 (1990) (holding that the warrant requirements of the Fourth Amendment did not apply to a search by American 22 authorities of the Mexican residence of a Mexican citizen who was apprehended in Mexico); Johnson v.
Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763 (1950) (holding that an enemy alien who was captured, tried, convicted of war 23 crimes, and imprisoned outside the United States was not entitled to apply for a writ of habeas corpus).

1 apprehend any alien of such excluded class, within one year after he or she entered the 2 United States, and return him or her to the country of origin. Id. at 99. The Supreme 3 Court rejected the argument that the statute permitted the Secretary of the Treasury or any 4 executive officer to take such actions without providing notice and “all opportunity to be 5 heard upon the questions involving [the alien’s] right to be and remain in the United 6 States.” Id. at 99-101; id. at 101 (“No such arbitrary power can exist where the principles 7 involved in due process of law are recognized.”). The Supreme Court observed that the 8 “reasonable construction” it had given to the act of Congress at issue brought the statute 9 “into harmony with the Constitution,” but the appellant was denied habeas corpus relief 10 because she had, in fact, received the requisite notice and opportunity to be heard. Id. at 11 101-02.

12 The Supreme Court reiterated the rule of Yamataya in deciding Shaughnessy v.
13 United States ex rel. Mezei, 345 U.S. 206 (1953), a case on which defendants heavily 14 rely. In Mezei, the Supreme Court summarized Yamataya as teaching that “aliens who 15 have once passed through our gates, even illegally, may be expelled only after 16 proceedings conforming to traditional standards of fairness encompassed in due process 17 of law.” Id. at 212 (emphasis added). In Mezei, however, unlike in Yamataya, the habeas 18 corpus petitioner never gained entry into the United States; he was stranded on Ellis 19 Island after being excluded upon arrival in New York on national security grounds and 20 after being refused entry by all other countries to which he had applied. Id. at 208-09.
21 With respect to the habeas corpus petitioner in Mezei, the Supreme Court observed that 22 “an alien on the threshold of initial entry stands on a different footing: ‘Whatever the 23

1 procedure authorized by Congress is, it is due process as far as an alien denied entry is 2 concerned.” Id. at 212.

3 Defendants point to this last passage in Mezei as support for the contention that 4 aliens who have not been “admitted” into, but are physically present in, the United States 5 are not entitled to the procedural due process guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment. Their 6 argument, however, ignores Mezei’s and Yamataya’s clear statement to the contrary, and 7 blurs the distinction between entry and admission.⁹ Entry, meaning physically crossing 8 the border in the United States, can occur both legally and illegally. Admission, within 9 the meaning of the INA as amended by IIRIRA, however, requires the sovereign to grant 10 permission to enter. Mezei and Yamataya teach that an alien who has entered the United 11 States, by being admitted or without having obtained such permission, has at least the 12 procedural due process rights to notice and an opportunity to be heard, which are the 13 constitutional minimum. See United States v. Raya-Vaca, 771 F.3d 1195, 1204 (9th Cir.
14 2014) (“Due process always requires, at a minimum, notice and an opportunity to 15

16 ⁹ A post-IIRIRA case cited by defendants further confuses matters. See Angov v. Lynch, 788 F.3d 893 17 (9th Cir. 2013) (amended June 8, 2015). In Angov, the question presented was summarized as follows:
18 “Does an immigration judge err by relying on a State Department investigation of an asylum petitioner’s 19 claim?” Id. at 896. The petitioner argued that the immigration judge’s reliance on a letter summarizing 20 the results of an investigation conducted by the United States consulate in Sofia, Bulgaria (the “Bunton 21 letter”) violated his procedural due process rights. Id. at 896-98. The majority declared that the petitioner 22 “has no such right,” but then cited Mezei for the proposition that “[a]liens ‘who have once passed through 23 our gates, even illegally,’ are afforded the full panoply of procedural due process protections.” Id. at 898 (quoting Mezei, 345 U.S. at 212). The dissent in Angov observed that five other circuits have held that “the government may not deny asylum solely on the basis of conclusory letters prepared for litigation in reliance on multiple layers of unauthenticated hearsay, without affording the petitioner some right of confronting the charges.” Id. at 911 (Thomas, C.J., dissenting). Given the dissent’s observation that the majority’s holding in Angov is at odds with the decisions of five other circuits, and the fact that Angov concerns asylum rather than removal proceedings, the Court declines defendants’ invitation to rely on Angov for the proposition that a “non-admitted” alien in removal proceedings has no procedural due process rights.

1 respond.” (citing Cleveland Bd. of Educ. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 542 (1985)); see 2 also Abdulai v. Ashcroft, 239 F.3d 542, 549 (3d Cir. 2001) (“[D]ue process requires three 3 things,” namely (i) “factfinding based on a record produced before the decisionmaker and 4 disclosed to” the alien, (ii) an opportunity for the alien “to make arguments on his or her 5 own behalf,” and (iii) “an individualized determination” of the alien’s interests); 6 Marincas v. Lewis, 92 F.3d 195, 203 (3d Cir. 1996) (defining as “two of the most basic of 7 due process protections” the right to “a neutral judge and a complete record of the 8 proceeding”). No named plaintiff in this action is in a situation analogous to that of the 9 habeas corpus petitioner in Mezei, and Mezei provides no basis for dismissing plaintiffs’ 10 right-to-counsel claim for lack of cognizability.¹⁰

11 The distinction that defendants draw between “non-admitted” and “deportable” 12 aliens might, however, still play a role in this litigation. The question the Court faces in 13 this case is not whether plaintiffs have procedural due process rights. Clearly they do.

15 ¹⁰ Defendants cite several cases involving “expedited removal” proceedings. See Pena v. Lynch, 815 F.3d 16 452 (9th Cir. 2015) (amended Feb. 18, 2016) (superseding 804 F.3d 1258 (9th Cir. 2015)); United States 17 v. Barajas-Alvarado, 655 F.3d 1077 (9th Cir. 2011); Garcia de Rincon v. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 539
18 F.3d 1133 (9th Cir. 2008); M.S.P.C. v. U.S. Customs & Border Prot., 60 F. Supp. 3d 1156 (D.N.M. 2014), 19 vacated as moot, 2015 WL 7454248 (D.N.M. Sep. 23, 2015). Except for M.S.P.C., which has been 20 vacated and is of no precedential value, these authorities delineate the limits of a court’s jurisdiction to 21 review “expedited removal” proceedings. See generally Raya-Vaca, 771 F.3d at 1199 (explaining that 22 two classes of aliens are subject to “expedited removal” proceedings: (i) aliens “arriving” in the United 23 States; and (ii) aliens who have entered the United States, are physically present without having been admitted or paroled, are discovered within 100 “air miles” of the border, and cannot establish that they have been physically present in the United States for at least 14 days (citing Designating Aliens for Expedited Removal, 69 Fed. Reg. 48877-01, 48880 (Aug. 11, 2004))). In this action, plaintiffs are not pursuing a right-to-counsel claim on behalf of juvenile aliens in “expedited removal” proceedings, and thus, the cases recognizing legislative restrictions on judicial involvement regarding such proceedings are not relevant. Moreover, defendants’ contention that aliens in “expedited removal” proceedings are afforded no procedural rights other than what Congress has provided runs contrary to the Ninth Circuit’s holding in Raya-Vaca that such proceedings must conform “to the dictates of due process.” Id. at 1203.

1 The question is what procedural rights are due to plaintiffs. The answer to this question 2 might be different for “non-admitted” aliens than it is for “deportable” aliens. See 3 Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 682 (2001) (observing that “[w]e deal here with aliens 4 who were admitted to the United States [and] subsequently ordered removed,” whereas 5 “[a]liens who have not yet gained initial admission to this country would present a very 6 different question”).

7 In Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21 (1982), the Supreme Court recognized this 8 dichotomy. In Plasencia, a pre-IIRIRA case, Maria Antoineta Plasencia, a permanent 9 resident of the United States, was denied admission when she attempted to return to the 10 country after a brief visit to Mexico; at the time, she and her husband were accompanied 11 by six aliens trying to illegally cross the border. Id. at 22-23. The issue in Plasencia was 12 whether the Immigration and Nationalization Service (“INS”) was required to proceed 13 against Plasencia in exclusion proceedings or in deportation proceedings; Plasencia 14 asserted that she was entitled to a deportation hearing at which she would receive more 15 procedural and substantive protections than in an exclusion proceeding. Id. at 22, 27.
16 The Supreme Court concluded that Plasencia was not entitled to a deportation proceeding 17 because the applicable statute indicated that admissibility of an alien was to be 18 determined solely in an exclusion hearing. Id. at 27-32.

19 With respect to any such exclusion proceeding, the United States conceded that 20 Plasencia was entitled to due process. Id. at 34. This concession (which is contrary to 21 defendants’ position in this case) did not, however, resolve the matter. As the Supreme 22 Court observed in Plasencia, the “constitutional sufficiency of procedures provided in 23

1 any situation, of course, varies with the circumstances.” Id. The existing safeguards and 2 any additional proposed procedures must be evaluated using the three-part balancing test 3 first articulated in Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976).¹¹ See 459 U.S. at 34. In 4 Plasencia, the Supreme Court declined to perform the Mathews analysis because the 5 parties had “devoted their attention to the entitlement to a deportation hearing rather than 6 to the sufficiency of the procedures in the exclusion hearing.” Id. at 36-37. The question 7 of whether Plasencia had been “accorded due process under all of the circumstances” was 8 remanded to the Ninth Circuit, id. at 37, which remanded to the district court, Plasencia 9 v. Dist. Dir., Immigration & Naturalization Serv., 719 F.2d 1425 (9th Cir. 1983).

10 In the end, defendants’ argument about the difference between “non-admitted” and 11 “deportable” aliens merely highlights for the Court that the Mathews factors might lead to 12 a variety of results depending on each plaintiff’s circumstances, but such possibility does 13 not establish that plaintiffs have failed to state a plausible claim for relief within the 14 meaning of Rule 12(b)(6) and Twombly. If, as defendants seem to suggest, the potential 15 for losing on the merits was the measure of whether a claim was adequately pleaded, then 16

17 ¹¹ Under Mathews, in evaluating whether due process has been satisfied, the following factors must be 18 weighed: (i) the nature of the private interest affected by the government action; (ii) the risk of erroneous 19 deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, as well as the probable value of additional or 20 substitute safeguards; and (iii) the interest of the government, including the fiscal or administrative 21 burdens that additional or different procedural requirements would entail. 424 U.S. at 335. In Turner v.
22 Rogers, 564 U.S. 431 (2011), the Supreme Court indicated that the Mathews factors are “useful” in 23 determining whether due process requires the appointment of counsel in a civil proceeding. Id. at ---, 131
S. Ct. at 2517; see also Oshodi v. Holder, 729 F.3d 883 (9th Cir. 2013) (applying the Mathews standard in concluding that an asylum petitioner who entered the United States without inspection was denied due process in his removal proceedings when the immigration judge directed him to limit his testimony to events that were not discussed in his asylum application).

1 no claim would ever survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. To the extent defendants’ 2 Rule 12(b)(6) motion is premised on the theory that “non-admitted” aliens have no due 3 process rights beyond what Congress has provided, their motion is without merit.
4 Whether the scope of such aliens’ procedural rights under the Fifth Amendment includes 5 the right to counsel at government expense is a question more appropriately reserved for 6 dispositive motion practice or trial.

7 3. Consolidated Removal Proceedings

8 Defendants assert that A.F.M.J., L.J.M., and M.R.J. have not pleaded a claim for 9 relief because they cannot seek counsel at government expense when their mother is also 10 in removal proceedings and presumably represents their interests. Although the result of 11 the mother’s removal proceedings will affect her children, presumably because she and 12 her two daughters and son will not wish to be separated, defendants’ contention that the 13 mother is a proper “representative” for her children in their removal proceedings is not 14 supported by the cases they cite. None of the four cases upon which defendants rely 15 stand for the proposition that a parent may or must represent his or her child in removal 16 proceedings. In two of the cases, the minor aliens filed asylum applications that ran 17 contrary to their parents’ wishes. Polovchak v. Meese, 774 F.2d 731 (7th Cir. 1985);¹²

18
19 ¹² In Polovchak, citizens of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (“U.S.S.R.”), who had settled 20 in Chicago, decided to return to their native country. 774 F.2d at 732. Their two eldest children, Nataly 21 and Walter, ages 17 and 12, wanted to remain in the United States, and Walter eventually filed an 22 application for asylum, which was granted without notice to his parents. Id. at 732-33. The Seventh 23 Circuit held that, although the parents were not parties to the asylum proceedings, they were entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard before asylum was granted to their son. Id. at 735-36. The Seventh Circuit reasoned that the parents’ interest was “one of the strongest our society knows” and the proposed pre-deprivation procedures “would burden the government only slightly.” Id.

1 see Gonzalez v. Reno, 212 F.3d 1338 (11th Cir. 2000).¹³ Although the Seventh and 2 Eleventh Circuits held in those cases that the parents' views should ordinarily trump 3 those of young children, both matters involved asylum applications, not removal 4 proceedings, and in neither situation was a parent serving or seeking to serve as a 5 "representative" for a child in removal proceedings.

6 The third case cited by defendants, involving an adult alien asserting a derivative 7 asylum claim, is even less favorable to their position. See Oforji v. Ashcroft, 354 F.3d 8 609 (7th Cir. 2003). In Oforji, the asylum petitioner, who was a Nigerian citizen, claimed 9 that removal would potentially cause her two daughters, who were United States citizens 10 but who would presumably return with her to Nigeria if she was removed, to be subjected 11 to female genital mutilation. Id. at 612. The derivative asylum claim was rejected 12 because the daughters were United States citizens and had a legal right to remain in the 13 country, which could be accommodated through placement with their father, if he could 14 be found, or an appointed guardian. Id. at 616. The Seventh Circuit saw this result as a 15 disincentive to excludable or deportable aliens to bear children whose rights, as American

17 ¹³ In Gonzalez, the plaintiff, Elian Gonzalez, arrived in the United States at the age of six, having endured 18 a boat ride from Cuba during which his mother died. 212 F.3d at 1344. He was paroled into the United 19 States and released to the custody of his great-uncle, who filed an application for asylum on his behalf.
20 Id. Elian subsequently filed his own asylum application. Id. His father, who remained in Cuba, indicated 21 a desire for Elian's return. Id. at 1345. The INS concluded that Elian's asylum applications were legally 22 void. Id. at 1345-46. The INS reasoned that a six-year-old child lacks the capacity to sign an application 23 for asylum, but must instead be represented by an adult in immigration matters, and absent "special circumstances," the only proper adult to represent a child is a parent, even when the parent is not within the United States. Id. at 1349-50. The INS further found that a parent's residence in a communist, totalitarian state like Cuba did not constitute "special circumstances." Id. The Eleventh Circuit held that the INS's policy was facially reasonable and had not been applied arbitrarily, capriciously, or in a manner constituting an abuse of discretion. Id. at 1350-56.

1 citizens, to stay in the United States are separate from the parents' obligations to depart.
2 Id. at 618.

3 In Oforji, the asylum petitioner was not "representing" her daughters in removal 4 proceedings, but rather using their interests in not returning to Nigeria as a basis for her 5 to remain in the United States. Thus, Oforji does not support defendants' contention that 6 "a parent or other guardian necessarily speaks for a child too young to articulate his or 7 her own claim." Mot. at 19-20 (docket no. 229) (citing the concurrence in Oforji, as 8 opposed to the majority opinion). Rather, Oforji illustrates the type of problem faced by 9 plaintiffs A.F.M.J. and L.J.M., whose biological father was a United States citizen; their 10 rights to remain in the United States are different from their mother's, but she might be 11 unwilling to assert their rights for fear of being separated from them if she cannot also 12 stay in the United States.

13 The fourth case on which defendants rely, Johns v. Dep't of Justice, 624 F.2d 522 14 (5th Cir. 1980), actually runs contrary to their position. In Johns, a husband and wife 15 brought an infant girl from Mexico into the United States without a visa or other proper 16 documentation. Id. at 523. Approximately five years later, the girl's biological mother 17 sought her return to Mexico, claiming that the child had been kidnapped. Id. The couple 18 contended that the biological mother had willingly given up the child and that they had 19 taken the girl with the biological mother's consent. Id. The Fifth Circuit concluded that, 20 in connection with deportation proceedings, neither the spouses nor the biological mother 21 could represent the young girl's interests, and it remanded with instructions to appoint a 22 guardian ad litem for the child and to direct the INS to conduct all further proceedings 23

1 with the guardian ad litem serving as the child's representative. Id. at 523-24. The 2 holding of Johns does not support defendants' argument that A.F.M.J., L.J.M., and 3 M.R.J. have failed to state a claim for counsel at government expense because their 4 mother is in removal proceedings with them. To the extent their mother's interests are 5 not aligned with their interests, which is conceivable given that two of them might have a 6 claim to United States citizenship, Johns indicates that someone other than the mother 7 should be appointed to represent the children. Defendants' assertion that, simply because 8 A.F.M.J., L.J.M., and M.R.J. are in removal proceedings with their mother, their right-to-9 counsel claims are not cognizable lacks merit.

10 Conclusion

11 For the foregoing reasons, defendants' partial motion to dismiss, docket no. 229, is 12 GRANTED in part, DEFERRED in part, and DENIED in part. Plaintiffs' claims against 13 USCIS Director León Rodríguez are DISMISSED. Plaintiff J.E.V.G.'s right-to-counsel 14 claim is DISMISSED as moot. Defendants' motion is DEFERRED with respect to 15 plaintiff M.A.M.'s right-to-counsel claim, and the parties are DIRECTED to file, by 16 May 6, 2016, a Joint Status Report concerning the status of M.A.M.'s removal 17 proceedings. Defendants' partial motion to dismiss is otherwise DENIED. Defendants 18 shall file their answer to the Third Amended Complaint by May 16, 2016. See Fed. R.
19 Civ. P. 12(a)(4) (upon the denial of a Rule 12 motion, the Court may set a time for a 20 responsive pleading to be filed).

1 IT IS SO ORDERED.

2 Dated this 15th day of April, 2016.

3 4

5 Thomas S. Zilly
6 United States District Judge
7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21
22
23