IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

Manuel de Jesus Ortega Melendres,

No. CV-07-2513-PHX-MHM

Plaintiff,

ORDER

12

Joseph M. Arpaio, et al.,

13

Defendant.

14

17

Currently pending before the Court are Defendants Joseph M. Arpaio, Maricopa County, and the Maricopa County Sheriff’s Office’s Motion to Dismiss (Dkt.#39.), and Plaintiffs Manuel de Jesus Ortega Melendres, Jessica Quitugua Rodriguez, David Rodriguez, Velia Meraz, Manuel Nieto, Jr., and Somos America’s Motion for an Expedited Rule 16 Conference. (Dkt.#49.) After reviewing the record and holding oral argument, the Court issues the following Order.

23

I. Standard

24

A Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. A Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper only where there is either a “lack of a cognizable legal theory” or “the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory.” Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). The Ninth Circuit has stated that “[t]he issue is not whether a plaintiff’s success on the merits is likely

28

1 but rather whether the claimant is entitled to proceed beyond the threshold in attempting to 2 establish his claims.” De La Cruz v. Tormey, 582 F.2d 45, 48 (9th Cir. 1978). The Court 3 must determine whether or not it appears to a certainty under existing law that no relief can 4 be granted under any set of facts that might be proved in support of plaintiffs’ claims. Id.

5 Rule 12(b)(6) must be read in conjunction with Rule 8(a) which requires “a short and 6 plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.” 5A Charles A.
7 Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure Section 1356 (1990). The notice 8 pleading standard set forth in Rule 8 establishes “a powerful presumption against rejecting 9 pleadings for failure to state a claim.” Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th 10 Cir. 1997). Therefore, a district court does not dismiss a complaint for failure to state a 11 claim unless “it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support 12 of his claim which would entitle him to relief.” Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 13 (1957); see also U.S. v. City of Redwood City, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981).

14 II. Background

15 This case concerns allegations that deputies from the Maricopa County Sheriff’s 16 Office (“MCSO”) have been profiling, targeting and ultimately stopping and detaining 17 persons based on their race in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the 18 United States Constitution, Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, and Article II, § 8 of the Arizona 19 Constitution. Defendants have responded to these claims by filing a motion to dismiss the 20 case for lack of jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be 21 granted. Specifically, Defendants have asserted that the organization Somos America lacks 22 Article III standing and cannot proceed as a Plaintiff in the instant lawsuit, and that the 23 claims of the remaining individual Plaintiffs Ortega Melendres, J. Rodriguez, D. Rodriguez, 24 Meraz, and Nieto all fail as a matter of law. Defendants have also argued that as a 42 U.S.C.
25 § 1983 municipal defendant Maricopa County cannot under be held liable for the alleged 26 violation of Plaintiffs’ constitutional rights. Lastly, Defendants contend that the MCSO is 27
28

1 a non-jural entity, and as such, is not capable of suing or being sued in its own name.¹
2 Because all well-plead allegations in Plaintiffs’ First Amended Complaint must be taken as 3 true for the purpose of ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court will briefly discuss the factual
4 allegations made by each named Plaintiff. See Smith v. Jackson, 84 F.3d 1213, 1217 (9th 5 Cir. 1996).

6 A. Manuel de Jesus Ortega Melendres

7 According to Plaintiffs’ Complaint, Ortega Melendres is a Mexican national who 8 possesses a valid U.S. Visa and a permit issued by the United States Department of 9 Homeland Security (“DHS”). On September 26, 2007, around 6:15 a.m., Ortega Melendres 10 was one of several passengers in a car that was being driven around Cave Creek, Arizona.

11 The driver of the vehicle was a Caucasian man, but the passengers, including Ortega
12 Melendres, were by physical appearance all Latino men. The car was pulled over by MCSO 13 deputies, at which time the driver was told that he was being stopped for speeding— although 14 no citation was ultimately issued. The deputies then asked Ortega Melendres to produce 15 identification. Ortega Melendres provided all of the identification that he was carrying in his 16 wallet, which included a valid U.S. Visa with his fingerprint and photograph—valid through 17 August 23, 2016, his Mexican Federal Voter Registration card, which also included his 18 fingerprint and photograph, and a copy of the DHS permit with a stamp showing its validity 19 through November 1, 2007.

20 After producing these three forms of identification, the deputies asked Ortega 21 Melendres to exit the vehicle, where he was subject to a pat down search. The deputies then 22 reached into Ortega Melendres’ pockets and removed various items, including a small bottle
23 of skin lotion. Ortega Melendres was then handcuffed and placed in the back of a MSCO 24

25 ¹ While Defendants have also argued that Sheriff Arpaio and the MCSO are entitled 26 to qualified immunity, under Ninth Circuit case law, “qualified immunity is only an 27 immunity from a suit for damages, and does not provide immunity from suit for declaratory 28 or injunctive relief.” Hydrick v. Hunter, 500 F.3d 978, 988 (9th Cir. 2007). After Plaintiffs amended their complaint to request only prospective injunctive relief, qualified immunity was no longer available to Defendants.

1 vehicle. Ortega Melendres was transported to a MCSO facility in Cave Creek and placed in 2 a holding cell. While Ortega Melendres was confined to the holding cell, which lasted for 3 approximately four hours, he alleges that he was neither advised of the crime that he had 4 allegedly committed, nor provided with any processing documentation.

5 After the four hour detention, the arresting officers placed Ortega Melendres back into 6 handcuffs and transported him to downtown Phoenix, where he was handed over to officials 7 from the United States Immigration and Custom Enforcement (“ICE”). At the ICE building, 8 Ortega Melendres was again placed in a holding cell, this time for one hour. With Sheriff’s 9 deputies present, ICE officials asked Ortega Melendres to produce valid documents regarding 10 his presence in the U.S. After briefly glancing over the documents that Ortega Melendres 11 had given MCSO deputies earlier in the day, the ICE official told Ortega Melendres that he 12 was free to leave. Upon release, Ortega Melendres was not given any information relating 13 to his nearly nine hour detention, other than a case number.

14 B. David and Jessica Rodriguez

15 On December 2, 2007, David and Jessica Rodriguez, who are husband and wife, were 16 leaving Lake Bartlett, Arizona with their two children. While driving, the Rodriguez’ passed 17 a sign that they thought read “Road Damaged.” At the same time, the Rodriguez’ could see 18 that road ahead had been washed out by recent rains. They also noticed two MCSO vehicles 19 located on the opposite side of the road. After the Rodriguez’ along with two other 20 vehicles—a motorcycle and a sedan—had driven past the road sign, the deputies pulled over 21 all three vehicles.

22 According to the Complaint, the driver of the motorcycle and sedan were let go in 23 short order without a visible exchange of any documentation. When a MSCO deputy 24 approached the Rodriguez’ vehicle, they were asked to produce a valid driver’s license, 25 vehicle registration, proof of insurance, and a social security card. After Mrs. Rodriguez 26 asked the deputy why it was necessary to present a social security card during a routine 27 traffic stop, the deputy answered that it was “standard procedure.” The deputy then asked 28 Mr. Rodriguez whether he had seen a sign marked “Road Closed.” Mr. Rodriguez answered

1 that he had only seen a “Road Damaged” sign. According to the Complaint, the Rodriguez’ 2 later discovered that there was indeed a “Road Closed” sign, but it was located on a portion 3 of the road that they had not yet traveled upon.

4 The deputy took Mr. Rodriguez’ information and returned to his vehicle. While 5 waiting for the deputy to return, the Rodriguez’ noticed that additional drivers continued to 6 be pulled over, and from what they could see, these drivers were being given oral warnings.
7 When the deputy returned, Mrs. Rodriguez asked if they, like the other drivers, could receive 8 a warning. The deputy declined. When Mrs. Rodriguez told the deputy that it appeared as 9 though they were being targeted because of their race, the Rodriguez’ were given a citation 10 for failure to obey a traffic control devise. After being advised that they were free to leave, 11 and driving to the exist of the Lake Bartlett preserve, the Rodriguez’ finally saw the “Road 12 Closed” sign. The Rodriguez’ pulled to the side of the road where Mr. Rodriguez was able 13 to speak with several drivers of other vehicle that had been pulled over in the same location 14 by MCSO deputies. According to the Complaint, none of those drivers were asked to produce 15 a social security card, nor had any of them received a citation. The Rodriguez’ also allege 16 that all of these other drivers were Caucasian.

17 C. Velia Meraz and Manuel Nieto, Jr.

18 Around March 28, 2008, Meraz and Nieto drove a vehicle from their family’s auto 19 repair business to a nearby gas station/convenience store. The windows of the car were down 20 and Meraz was singing along to Spanish language music playing in the car. As they pulled 21 into the parking lot, Meraz and Nieto noticed that there was a MCSO vehicle parked behind 22 another vehicle located at one of the gas pumps. They also noticed that a MCSO deputy was 23 speaking with two men who were in handcuffs. The deputy then yelled over to Meraz and 24 Nieto to leave. Meraz asked why. At that point, the deputy walked over and accused Meraz
25 and Nieto of disturbing the peace—to which Meraz remarked that she was only singing along 26 to music. The deputy repeated the request to leave, while warning Meraz and Nieto that they 27 could be arrested for disorderly conduct. Meraz agreed the two of them would leave, but 28

1 before doing so she asked for the deputy's badge number. The deputy then spoke into his 2 radio, apparently signaling other officers in the area to the scene.

3 As Meraz and Nieto pulled out of the parking lot, they noticed a motorcycle officer 4 coming down the road. The deputy, still located next to the gas pump, signaled to the officer 5 on the motorcycle to follow their vehicle. Nieto, who was apparently driving, noticed that 6 the motorcycle officer along with three other MCSO vehicles were now behind him. The 7 motorcycle officer signaled for Nieto to pull over and get out of the car. In response, Nieto 8 dialed 911 to report that he was being harassed by the MCSO for no apparent reason. Since 9 Nieto's family business was no more than 50 yards away, he pulled over into the auto store's 10 parking lot. At that time, the four MCSO vehicles descended on them, blocking off the 11 street. After MCSO deputies came out of their vehicles with weapons raised, an officer 12 grabbed Nieto and pulled him out of the car, pressing him face first against his car, placing 13 his arms behind his back and putting him into handcuffs. A deputy asked Nieto whether he 14 possessed a driver's license, to which he replied that he did.

15 The commotion attracted people from inside Nieto's family's auto repair shop. Mr.
16 Nieto's father then came from out of the shop and told the officers that the shop was his and 17 that Nieto and Meraz were his children, and that they were both U.S. citizens— at which time 18 the MCSO deputies backed down and withdrew their weapons. Once Nieto's identification 19 was processed, he and Meraz were released without receiving a citation. Nieto and Meraz 20 believe that they were targeted because they are Latino and that the incident was part of a 21 larger immigration sweep being conducted by the MCSO in the Cave Creek, Arizona area 22 at the time.

23 III. Plaintiffs' Claims Under the Fourth Amendment

24 The Fourth Amendment protects individuals against unreasonable searches and 25 seizures. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 9 (1968). "Whenever a police officer accosts an 26 individual and restrains his or her freedom to walk away" that person has been seized within 27 the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. Murillo v. Musegades, 809 F. Supp. 487, 498 (W.D.
28 Tex. 1992). The length and scope of detention must be justified by the circumstances

1 authorizing its initiation. See Terry, 392 U.S. at 16. Consistent with the Fourth 2 Amendment, law enforcement officer may conduct a brief investigatory stop or seizure when 3 an officer has reasonable suspicion “supported by articulable facts that criminal activity may 4 be afoot.” United States v. Sololow, 490 U.S. 1, 7 (1989). An investigatory seizure based 5 on reasonable suspicion must be brief and must last no longer than necessary for the officer 6 to investigate the situation with the aim of either confirming or dispelling his or her 7 suspicion. See United States v. Urrieta, 520 F.3d 569, 578-79 (6th Cir. 2008); United States
8 v. Valdez, 267 F.3d 395, 397 (5th Cir. 2001). In addition, an officer may frisk or pat down 9 an individual during an investigatory stop only where there are specific and articulable facts 10 that the individual is armed. See Terry, 392 U.S. at 21, 27.

11 A full custodial arrest, on the other hand, must be based on probable cause. See 12 generally, McKenzie v. Lamb, 738 F.2d 1005, 1008 (9th Cir. 1984). “Probable cause exists 13 where the facts and circumstances within the officers’ knowledge and of which they had 14 reasonably trustworthy information are sufficient in themselves to warrant a man of 15 reasonable caution in the belief that an offense has been or is being committed by the person 16 to be arrested.” Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200, 208 n.9 (1979).

17 There is no bright line rule to determine when an officer has reasonable suspicion or 18 probable cause. Instead, both are measured by analyzing the totality of the circumstances 19 surrounding the encounter. See Cortez, 449 U.S. at 418. The Supreme Court has 20 determined that under a totality of the circumstances analysis lower courts are prohibited 21 from adopting a “divide and conquer” approach, whereby each individual factor cited by the 22 officer to support his assessment is viewed in isolation, and accorded no weight if susceptible 23 to an innocent explanation. Id. at 274. Along similar lines, the Supreme Court has noted that 24 law enforcement officers in assessing the likelihood of criminal or suspicious activity often 25 rely upon specialized training and experience to “make inferences from and deductions about 26 the cumulative information available to them that might well elude an untrained person.” 27 United States v. Arvizu, 534 U.S. 266, 273 (2002). “[T]he Court has emphasized that even 28 when factors considered in isolation from each other are susceptible to an innocent

1 explanation, they may [to the discerning eye] collectively amount to [probable cause or] 2 reasonable suspicion.” United States v. Berber-Tinoco, 510 F.3d 1083,1087 (9th Cir. 2007).

3 With respect to reasonable suspicion, it is a less demanding standard than probable 4 cause, but still requires an objective justification for the detention. See United States v.
5 Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, 1129 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc). The officer in question 6 needs to be able to “articulate more than an inchoate . . . suspicion or [a] hunch of criminal 7 activity.” Id. (quoting Illinois v. Wardlow, 528 U.S. 119, 145 (2000)). Instead, “reasonable 8 suspicion exists when an officer is aware of specific, articulable facts which, when 9 considered with objective and reasonable inferences, form a basis for particularized 10 suspicion.” Id. (citing United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411, 418 (1981) (emphasis in 11 original)). The Ninth Circuit has repeatedly “rejected profiles that are likely to sweep many 12 ordinary citizens into a generality of suspicious appearance.” Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 13 at 1129-30 (citing United States v. Rodriguez, 976 F.2d 592, 595-96 (9th Cir. 1992)).

14 Within the immigration context, it unquestioned that ICE agents and, if applicable, 15 local law enforcement agencies, have the right to investigate and if necessary arrest 16 individuals who are illegally present within the United States; their actions are however 17 always circumscribed by the Fourth Amendment. See United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 18 U.S. 873, 885-87 (1975) (holding that under the Fourth Amendment law enforcement officers 19 may, when based upon reasonable suspicion, “question [an individual] about their citizenship 20 and immigration status, and [] may ask them to explain suspicious circumstances, but any 21 further detention or search must be based on consent or probable cause.”). Reasonable 22 suspicion in the immigration enforcement setting must therefore also be individualized and 23 focused on the particular person being stopped. United States v. Salinas, 940 F.2d 392, 394 24 (9th Cir. 1991). “Where . . . the majority (or any substantial number) of people share a 25 specific characteristic, that characteristic is of little or no probative value in such a 26 particularized and context-specific analysis.” Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d at 1131. Courts 27 cannot “approve the wholesale seizure of miscellaneous persons . . . in the absence of well-28 founded suspicion based on particular, individualized and objectively observable factors

1 which indicate” that the person is indeed an illegal alien. Id. at 1132 (quoting United States
2 v. Rodriguez-Sanchez, 23 F.3d 1488, 1492 (9th Cir. 1994)).

3 With respect to the role played by race in this process, the Ninth Circuit has found that 4 an individual’s race, standing alone, is not an appropriate factor for assessing reasonable 5 suspicion under the totality of the circumstances. In the immigration enforcement setting, 6 the Ninth Circuit has been even more specific, holding that “Hispanic appearance is of little 7 or no use in determining which particular individuals among the vast Hispanic populace 8 should be stopped by law enforcement officials on the lookout for illegal aliens.” Id. at 1134.
9 In this vein, the Ninth Circuit has held:

10 The likelihood that in an area in which the majority—or even a substantial part—of 11 the population is Hispanic, any given person of Hispanic ancestry is in fact an alien, 12 let alone an illegal alien, is not high enough to make Hispanic appearance a relevant 13 factor in the reasonable suspicion calculus. As we have previously held, factors that 14 have such a low probative value that no reasonable officer would have relied on them 15 to make an investigative stop, must be disregarded as a matter of law.

16 Id. at 1132. Rather than relying upon racial generalizations, immigration enforcement 17 officials must make what the Ninth Circuit has referred to as “permissible deductions;” 18 meaning, logical inferences about apparent criminal activity that are predicated upon 19 objectively verifiable evidence. See Berber-Tinoco, 510 F.3d at 1088 (quoting Cortez, 20 449 U.S. at 419-20). With this background in mind, the Court will now turn to analyze 21 the factual events which constitute Plaintiffs’ well-plead Complaint.

22 With respect to Plaintiff Ortega Melendres, Defendants argue in their Motion to 23 Dismiss that because the MCSO deputy had probable cause to pull over the car in which 24 Ortega Melendres was a passenger for speeding, MCSO deputies were thereby entitled 25 to arrest Ortega Melendres and detain him for approximately nine hours. This argument 26 is baseless, ignoring requirements that criminal suspicion be individualized. Contrary to 27 Defendants’ assertion, the Complaint plainly sets forth several cognizable violations of 28 Mr. Ortega Melendres’ rights under the Fourth Amendment.

First, assuming all facts alleged by Ortega Melendres are true, MCSO deputies had no more than reasonable suspicion to temporarily detain the driver of the car to conduct

1 a brief investigatory stop regarding an apparent traffic violation. Once MCSO deputies 2 began to question Ortega Melendres in an apparent attempt to inquire into his 3 immigration status, that encounter needed to be supported by additional indices of 4 criminal suspicion. See Brendlin v. California, 551 U.S. 249 (2007) (“When a police 5 officer makes a traffic stop, the driver of the car is seized within the meaning of the 6 Fourth Amendment. The same is true of a passenger.”).² From the face of the Complaint, 7 it does not appear that there were “specific and articulable facts” to suggest that Ortega 8 Melendres was engaged in any type of criminal activity when deputies initially engaged 9 him. There are certainly no facts present in the Complaint that would permit the Court 10 to make a reasonable inference that Ortega Melendres should have been under suspicion 11 of being an illegal alien when the officers first approached the car. At best, the deputies 12 had reasonable suspicion to believe that someone other than Ortega Melendres had 13 committed the offense of speeding. This falls far short of justifying an immigration based 14 investigatory stop of Ortega Melendres.

15 The Complaint states an additional Fourth Amendment violation that occurred 16 when Ortega Melendres was placed into full custodial arrest without probable cause. As 17 mentioned above, by questioning Ortega Melendres while he was a passenger in a car that 18 had been stopped for a traffic violation, MCSO deputies seized Ortega Melendres without 19 specific and articulable facts that criminal activity was afoot. Notwithstanding that 20 Fourth Amendment violation, once Ortega Melendres provided MCSO deputies with 21 sufficient immigration documents—including a U.S. Visa containing a fingerprint and 22

23 ²Ortega Melendres was seized with the meaning of the Fourth Amendment because 24 a reasonable person in Ortega Melendres’ position would not have felt free to leave the car 25 and disengage with the deputies. See United States v. Washington, 490 F.3d 765, 769 (9th 26 Cir. 2007) (“A person is seized if taking into account all of the circumstances surrounding 27 the encounter, the police conduct would have communicated to a reasonable person that he 28 was not at liberty to ignore the police presence and go about his business.”) (quoting Florida
v. Bostick, 501 U.S. 429, 437 (1991) (internal quotations omitted)). See United States v.
Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544, 554 (1980) (“[A] reasonable person would have believed that he was not free to leave.”).

1 picture, a DHS permit, and a Mexican Federal Voter Registration Card with picture and 2 fingerprint—MCSO deputies were not justified in placing Ortega Melendres in full 3 custodial arrest for violating U.S. immigration laws. If, as Defendants argue, this Court 4 were to sanction the action alleged in the Complaint as a matter of law, then state law
5 enforcement officials would be capable of arresting any lawful non-citizen of Hispanic 6 heritage who presented a U.S. Visa and other seemingly valid immigration 7 documents—irrespective of any additional indices of suspicion.³

8 The Court will next turn to the Fourth Amendment claims of Plaintiffs D. and J.
9 Rodriguez. With respect to their contentions, even though the initial encounter between 10 the Rodriguez family and the MCSO was based on reasonable suspicion that the car had 11 violated Arizona State law by driving on a road closure, the Complaint sufficiently 12 alleges that the scope and duration of the investigatory stop was exceeded when deputies 13 requested Mr. Rodriguez’ social security card in an apparent attempt to inquire into the 14 Rodriguez family’s immigration status. On its face, the Complaint adequately states that 15 such a request was not “standard procedure” for all routine traffic stops conducted by the 16 MCSO, since none of the other drivers on the same road closure were asked to produce 17 a social security card. And nothing in the Complaint suggests that a reasonable officer 18 could have concluded that the Rodriguez’ were illegal aliens, based solely on the fact that 19 they drove past a sign marked “Road Closed” or “Road Damaged.” As previously noted, 20 Hispanic physical appearance by itself never gives rise to reasonable suspicion that the 21 person seized is violating U.S. immigration law. Again, given the procedural posture of 22 this case, any external analysis regarding the surrounding circumstances of the stop would 23 be inappropriate for the Court to consider.

26 ³It is important to keep in mind that at this stage of the proceedings the Court is only 27 resolving a Motion to Dismiss, where all factual allegations made in Plaintiff Ortega 28 Melendres’ Complaint are treated as true. It would be inappropriate at this stage of the proceedings for the Court to consider evidence external to the Complaint, such as the training, experience and observations of the arresting officers.

1 With respect to Plaintiffs Meraz and Nieto, the Court will similarly permit their 2 Fourth Amendment claims to proceed beyond this initial stage. The Court cannot resolve 3 as a matter of law the legality of Meraz and Nieto’s seizure without first resolving many 4 fact intensive questions. Such questions include whether Meraz and Nieto complied with 5 the deputies instructions to leave the scene, whether such instructions were reasonable, 6 whether Nieto immediately pulled over after being signaled to do so by a MCSO 7 motorcycle, and whether deputies were justified in drawing their weapons on Meraz and 8 Nieto. The Court will therefore take up this issue again on summary judgment, after 9 discovery has closed, and the Parties have been given the opportunity to bring forth 10 additional information.

11 It is worth noting, however, that unlike Plaintiffs Ortega Melendres and D. and 12 J. Rodriguez, there is no evidence in the Complaint to suggest that the investigatory stop 13 of Meraz and Nieto was initiated or extended in order to inquire into the immigration 14 status of the two Plaintiffs. Furthermore, Plaintiffs’ claim that Meraz and Nieto were 15 released after their father identified them as U.S. Citizens has no bearing on the Fourth
16 Amendment inquiry. The only question under the Fourth Amendment is whether MCSO 17 deputies had an objective basis to briefly detain Meraz and Nieto; an officer’s subjective 18 beliefs—including alleged biases relating to a suspect’s race or national origin—play no 19 role in the Fourth Amendment analysis. See Whren v. United States, 517 U.S. 806, 813 20 (1996) (noting that an inquiry under the Fourth Amendment is wholly objective, and that 21 claims related to an officer’s subjective intentions are only cognizable under the Equal 22 Protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment).

23 In Sum, Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim under the 24 Fourth Amendment is denied.

25 IV. Plaintiffs’ Claims Under the Equal Protection Clause

26 “The Constitution prohibits selective enforcement of the law based on 27 considerations such as race.” Whren, 517 U.S. at 813. Under the Equal Protection 28 Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, a law enforcement officer’s discriminatory

1 motivations can give rise to a constitutional violation even where the unequal treatment 2 occurred during an otherwise lawful criminal detention. Farm Labor Org. Comm. V.
3 Ohio State Highway Patrol, 308 F.3d 523, 533 (6th Cir. 2002).

4 The Parties do not agree as to what is required to successfully state a § 1983 claim 5 for selective enforcement of criminal laws in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.
6 Plaintiffs contend that they only need to demonstrate that Defendants' conduct had both 7 a discriminatory purpose and a discriminatory effect. Rodriguez v. Cal. Highway Patrol, 8 89 F. Supp. 2d 1131, 1140-41 (N.D. Cal. 2000). On the other hand, Defendants argue 9 that "[t]o establish a discriminatory effect" in a selective enforcement case, Plaintiffs 10 must also show that similarly situated individuals were treated differently. Rosenbaum 11 v. City & County of San Francisco, 484 F.3d 1142, 1152-53 (9th Cir. 2007) (quoting 12 United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 465 (1996)). Defendants note that this is the 13 same legal standard that is required for selective prosecution cases brought under the 14 Equal Protection clause.⁴ At this stage of the litigation, the Court will not resolve the 15 question of whether Plaintiffs must prove that similarly situated individuals of a non-16 minority group were treated differently than the named Plaintiffs, who are all Hispanic.
17 This is because Plaintiffs' selective enforcement claims withstand Defendants' Motion 18 to Dismiss under either construction of law.

19 With respect to whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently plead a discriminatory purpose, 20 the Complaint is replete with references to acts of intentional discrimination by

22 ⁴Plaintiffs respond by arguing that where a discriminatory purpose is manifest, a 23 claimant does not need to also show that similarly situated members of non-minority groups 24 were treated differently. See Pyke v. Cuomo, 258 F.3d 107, 108-09 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding 25 that plaintiffs could plead a "theory of discriminatory motivation underlying a facially neutral 26 policy . . . [without] show[ing] the disparate treatment of other similarly situated 27 individuals."). Plaintiffs also claim that the Court should not conflate selective enforcement 28 cases with selective prosecution cases, since a selective prosecution claim implicates concerns related to prosecutorial discretion, and absent clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that prosecutors have properly discharged their duties. Armstrong, 517 U.S. at 464.
"Law enforcement officers, in contrast, never have been afforded the same presumption of regularity." Rodriguez, 89 F. Supp. 2d at 1141.

1 Defendants against Plaintiffs on the basis of race. Examples of such intentional 2 discrimination include allegations that Defendant Arpaio made a public statement that 3 physical appearance alone is sufficient to question an individual about their immigration 4 status, that MCSO’s crime suppression sweeps have been allegedly targeted at areas 5 having a high concentration of Hispanics, and that the MCSO has used volunteers to 6 assist in these crime sweeps who have known animosity towards Hispanics and 7 immigrants.

8 With respect to whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently plead a discriminatory effect, 9 “a government program that sets out to discriminate intentionally in its enforcement of 10 some neutral law or policy will rarely if ever fail to achieve its purpose.” Doe v. Vill. of 11 Mamaroneck, 462 F. Supp. 2d 520, 543 (S.D.N.Y. 2006). In addition, the Complaint also 12 contains claims that Defendants’ policies and practices have treated similarly situated 13 persons differently. First, the Complaint makes a general allegation—which the Court 14 takes as true for the purpose of ruling on the instant Motion—that Caucasian drivers and 15 passengers have been treated differently by the MCSO and other Defendants, since 16 Caucasian drivers have been stopped at much lower rates than similarly situated Hispanic 17 drivers and passengers. (¶32) Allegations of disparate treatment are also present in the 18 claims of the named Plaintiffs. For example, Ortega Melendres alleges that the Caucasian 19 driver of the car in which he was a passenger was not questioned in a similar manner or 20 with a similar purpose. Likewise, the Rodriguez’ Plaintiffs allege that they were able to 21 speak with the other drivers who drove past the road closure near Lake Bartlett, Arizona, 22 all of whom were Caucasian, and none of them had been asked by MCSO deputies to 23 present their social security card. Furthermore, none of the Caucasian drivers allegedly 24 received a citation for driving on a closed road. With respect to Meraz and Nieto, the 25 Complaint alleges that once their father identified them as U.S. Citizens, the MCSO 26 deputies released Nieto from custody and left the scene. These facts are more than 27 sufficient to show a discriminatory purpose and effect on the part of Defendants at this 28 preliminary stage of the litigation.

1 Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim under the Equal 2 Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment will therefore be denied as to all 3 Plaintiffs.

4 V. Plaintiffs' § 1983 Municipal Liability Claim

5 Under Monell v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 691-94 (1978), 6 municipal liability attaches where a plaintiff's alleged constitutional deprivation was the 7 product of a policy or custom of the local government. See Fogel v. Collins, 531 F.3d 8 824, 834 (9th Cir. 2008). "For purposes of liability under Monell, a policy is a deliberate 9 choice to follow a course of action . . . made from among various alternatives by the 10 official or officials responsible for establishing final policy with respect to the subject 11 matter in question." Id. (quoting Fairley v. Luman, 281 F.3d 913, 918 (9th Cir. 2002) 12 (per curiam) (internal quotations omitted)). Whether a state official is a final policy 13 maker for purposes of municipal liability is a question of state law that is to be 14 determined by the district court. See Streit v. County of Los Angeles, 236 F.3d 552, 560
15 (9th Cir. 2001). When determining whether an individual has final policymaking 16 authority, courts ask whether the individual at issue has authority "in a particular area, or 17 on a particular issue." McMillian v. Monroe County, 520 U.S. 781, 785 (1997).

18 In the absence of an express local policy, a plaintiff may demonstrate that there 19 is a well settled custom or practice by the municipality which produced the alleged 20 constitutional violation. See Navarro v. Block, 72 F.3d 712, 714-15 (9th Cir. 1996).
21 Allegations of random acts are generally insufficient to establish a local custom. Id. at 22 714. If a plaintiff can sufficiently prove the existence of a local custom, they need not 23 also show that final policy makers were aware of or sanctioned the custom in question.
24 Id. at 714-15.

25 Here, Defendants argue that Defendant Sheriff Arpaio is not a final policy maker 26 for the County of Maricopa with respect to law enforcement issues. Without citation to 27 relevant case law, Defendants contend that Arizona statutes, specifically, A.R.S.
28 §11-251(30)-(31), vest sole final decision making power on all matter relating to

1 Maricopa County with the Maricopa County Board of Supervisors. Defendants claim that 2 if Arpaio possesses any final policy making authority, it is only with respect to the 3 MCSO, not Maricopa County. Plaintiffs counter by citing to Flanders v. Maricopa 4 County, 203 Ariz. 368 (Ct. App. 2002) and Guillory v. Greenlee County, 2006 U.S. Dist.
5 LEXIS 71926 (D. Ariz. Sept. 28, 2006), both of which held that Arizona Counties could 6 be held liable for the discretionary acts of its Sheriff in the context of jail management 7 and law enforcement policy. With respect to whether Sheriffs are final policy makers for 8 Arizona Counties in the context of criminal law enforcement, Guillory went on to 9 specifically hold:

10 The Sheriff is an enumerated officer of the Defendant County. 11-401(A)(1). As a 11 matter of law, the County is liable for policies made by the Sheriff, pursuant to his 12 designated powers and duties as provided for by statute: A.R.S. § 11-441. See e.g., Flanders, 54 P.3d at 847 (holding county liable because the sheriff is a county officer whose duties regarding jail operations are fixed by law, A.R.S. § 11-441(5)).

13 Section 11-441(A)(2) provides that the Sheriff shall arrest and take before a 14 magistrate for examination all persons who attempt to commit or who have committed 15 a public offense. The purpose of this duty is the prompt and orderly administration of 16 criminal justice, including the Sheriff's discretionary investigatory determination of 17 when enough evidence has been obtained to make an arrest. Cf Arizona v. Monaco, 207 Ariz. 75, 83 P.3d 553, 558-59 (Ariz. App. 2004) (explaining the statute does not 18 create a constitutional right to be arrested upon first discovery of criminal activity because sheriff must be permitted to exercise discretion to conduct investigation until enough evidence is obtained for a conviction). This makes the Sheriff the final policymaker regarding criminal investigations.

19 Under A.R.S. § 11-444, actual and necessary expenses of the Sheriff must be allowed 20 and paid by the County. The Court finds that this fiscal independence further 21 demonstrates that the Sheriff is the designated and final policymaker for the County 22 regarding the needs of its officers for the prompt and orderly administration of 23 criminal justice

24 Guillory, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71926 at *11-13. In the absence of precedent to the 25 contrary, the Court is inclined to follow this line reasoning—particularly when the 26 Arizona statute cited by Defendants to support their point is inapposite.⁵ The County of 27 ⁵ A.R.S. § 11-251 (30)-(31) describes the power of the Board of Supervisors in broad 28 terms, and the statute does not speak to the precise issue in this case. In fact, the statute is completely silent as to the respective power and responsibilities of a Sheriff under Arizona state law.

1 Maricopa will therefore remain in the instant lawsuit as a municipal defendant pursuant 2 to § 1983.

3 VI. Maricopa Country Sheriff's Office as a Non-Jural Entity

4 Defendants also contend that the MCSO is a non-jural entity, incapable of suing 5 or being sued in its own name. The Court is aware that this issue is very much unsettled 6 within the District of Arizona, and that Arizona State Courts have declined to address the 7 same issue. See Williams v. City of Tempe, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14518, *8 (D. Ariz.
8 March 27, 2006) (“There is no per se rule that police departments are not jural entities.
9 In fact, there is no consensus within the District of Arizona as to whether the Maricopa 10 County Sheriff's Office is a jural entity.”); see also Flanders, 203 Ariz. at 379. On the 11 one hand, a sister court within the District of Arizona, in a lengthy and well reasoned 12 opinion, determined that the MCSO was in fact a non-jural entity, since it does not possess 13 a legal identity separate and apart from that of Maricopa County. Wilson v. Maricopa 14 County, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28021 (D. Ariz. November 15, 2005). On the other 15 hand, Plaintiffs have cited to several cases where the MCSO has been amenable to suit, 16 as both plaintiff and defendant. See Maricopa County Sheriff's Office v. Maricopa 17 County Employee Merit Sys. Comm'n, 211 Ariz 219 (2005); W. Valley View, Inc. v.
18 Maricopa County Sheriff's Office, 216 Ariz. 225 (Ct. App. 2007); Patterson v. Maricopa 19 County Sheriff's Office, 117 Ariz. 153 (Ct. App. 1993). Plaintiffs additionally argue that 20 because the MCSO constitutes a “program or activity,” which receives federal funds 21 under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000d-4a-(1)(A), it must be 22 subject to suit under the statute to enjoin any unlawful use of those funds. Because the 23 Title VI issue was not addressed by Defendants—who chose not to file a Reply brief in 24 this case—and because the MCSO has acted as a plaintiff as recently as 2005, the Court 25 will not dismiss the MCSO as a non-jural entity.

26 VII. Somos America's Article III Standing

27 Lastly, Defendants challenge the Article III standing of the organizational Plaintiff 28 Somos America, arguing that it failed to sufficiently allege an injury-in-fact to one of its 1 members, and that the interests it seeks to protect are not relevant to its core purpose.

2 Under Ninth Circuit case law, however, the Court need not reach this issue. “The 3 general rule applicable to federal court suits with multiple plaintiffs is that once the court 4 determines that one of the plaintiffs has standing, it need not decide the standing of the 5 others.” Preminger v. Peake, 536 F.3d 1000, 1006 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Leonard v.
6 Clark, 12 F.3d 885, 888 (9th Cir. 1993)). In the instant case, it is undisputed that 7 Plaintiffs Ortega Melendres, D. Rodriguez, J. Rodriguez, Meraz and Nieto have Article
8 III standing. Because their claims have not been dismissed and are instead proceeding 9 forward in this lawsuit, the Court need not inquire into the standing of Somos America 10 either.

11 Accordingly,

12 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED denying Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss. (Dkt.#39.)

13 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED denying as moot Plaintiffs’ Motion for an 14 Expedited Rule 16 Conference. (Dkt.#49.)
